Diamond Dan is a puzzle platformer based more on quick reflexes than logic. You must descend towers of ever-shifting blocks to find a map at the bottom and escape. Sounds simple, but you can be crushed or thrown from the tower, and many of the blocks contain traps such as water or spike pits, projectiles, or enemies living inside the walls who will pull you to your death. Checkpoints are created by opening shortcuts with keys. Traps can be triggered without harming yourself, if you do it quickly, and doing so rewards you by increasing your multiplier, which adds to the value of any treasure you pick up. Your score at the end of the level is then multiplied based on the difficulty you're playing on. Difficulty affects density of traps and how quickly the blocks shift (it can get insane) and can be changed at will for any level. You can play as Dan (pushes blocks) or Ann (shatters blocks) on any level and there are separate leaderboards for each. Friend and global leaderboards and tons of achievements.. <https://youtu.be/koUISeSjZsE> Fresh faced treasure hunter 'Diamond Dan' is out to build a name for himself by robbing cubist designed temples of their gold, gems, and load bearing scrolls. Thankfully ancient temple design all came from the same temple template of same colored blocks. Swipe the escape scroll at the bottom of each temple and get out before it collapses is the core gameplay loop. The randomly generated levels don't create any movement flow and players are often locked into long periods of waiting for blocks to randomly move in order to progress.. Surprisingly fun. Sort of like Indiana Jones meets Cube meets Bejewelled.. I loved this game, the achievements could've been a bit harder, I only needed 19 hours to get them all, but the game is really fun. Though I played with Ann a lot more than Dan.. Diamond Dan is a puzzle platformer based more on quick reflexes than logic.
